As far as the best film I saw in five years is 'Oppenheimer'.
It just blew my mind.

The film is named after the creator of nuclear bomb. 'Oppenheimer' can be split in two parts: how the scientists made the bomb, and the life of man created after World War II. The creation of nuclear bomb was a task from the government and it was a big honour for Oppenheimer to be a leader of the project. He and other scientists worked very hard to complete the task. But as the day of unleashing the bomb came in, Oppenheimer began to wonder, whether he was right in making the worst weapon. He understood that he made a big mistake and was against dropping the bomb in Japan. After the war he was cancelled and never reached the top anymore.

I like this film because I was inspired by the acting game of Killian Murphy and the story of nuclear bomb's creator. It's very philosophical film. Oppenheimer acknowledged, the whole world would be another, if he hadn't created this weapon.
